The Mirror, a spicy and newsy weekly has just been launched in Honolulu, with two prolific and interesting writers H. M. Ayers and W. F. Sabin at the helm. The paper is red, has been read, and will be ready every Saturday morning. It gives special attention to athletic sports.

The Paradise of the Pacific is now owned as well as published by Williams M. Langton, and the fully number just received is simply perfect, so far as the printer's art is concerned, especially the illustrations. The reading matter is interesting, and it deserves a large circulation on Maui.

The manager and members of the Maui baseball team are profuse in their expressions of gratitude for the kindly reception they met in Honolulu. Charley Chillingworth especially left nothing undone for their pleasure and comfort which kindness and consideration could suggest. He not only fulfilled every financial promise to the letter, but also generously divided surplus gate receipts with the Maui team, to the amount of $60. If the boys ever catch Charley on Maui again, they won't do a thing to him.

HONOLULU FAIR NOTES

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT)

The horse races which took place at Kapiolani Park, 4 miles from town, Saturday afternoon, the 26th, the Merchants' Fair which opened the same evening, the agricultural fair which began at noon on the 28th, and the ball game of the same afternoon at Punahou, all attracted thousands of spectators.

The races created much amusement and as there was little betting were run on their merits. Every thing was conducted in a fair and sportsmanlike manner.

The winning of the three events by "Bob" Ballentine, a former resident of Lahaina and Spreckelsville gave much pleasure to the Maui people who were in the grandstand. This horse, Amarino, the winner of two of the events, is most popular with Honolulu people.

The polo pony, "Jim Crow" who ran $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile in 41 seconds, is probably faster than any of our Maui ponies.

The event which caused the most fun and laughter was the gentlemen's riding race in which 18 started, a few dressed appropriately but many in their ordinary dress riding around the track helter-skelter with coat-tails flying. Bob Ballentine on what seemed to be an old skate (Bruner), veiled by the crowd, "Amarino No. 2," kept behind the riders close to the inside rail and soon after the start forged ahead and maintained the lead to the finish.

The 10th and the last event was unique, a cowboy race; three mile relay. The three contestants had to change horses at the end of each mile, each doing the unsaddling and saddling up. W. C. Vida who gained a great advantage by using a buckle instead of the usual strap on cinch, won the race amid cheers and yells.

At the Merchants' Fair by far the greatest attraction was the display made by the Hawaiian Electric Co. Ltd. Their large booth lined with turkey-red, was ablaze with circles of colored electric lights and exhibited all sorts of electric novelties.

High overhead was a large oblong piece of glass with aloha in the center in metal letters. To these letters wires were attached and every now and then throughout the evening hours, all the lights in the large building were extinguished and the full electric power said to be 40,000 volts was directed upon the word "Aloha."

To a novice, the effect was appalling rather than pleasurable, for the fierce electric fluid snapped, crackled frightfully, and after a second or two of a purple light with spray-like, indeterminate forms, tongues of forked lightning darted in zigzag lines, in all directions. It was like some huge giant striving to break his bonds, which seemed hardly strong enough to confine him.

One old lady said of the beautiful dresses displayed on wax figures in Montano & Co.'s display of the ladies' furnishing goods. "I like this best."

A little boy preferred the exhibition of meats by the Metropolitan Meat Co., several huge quarters of beef about which hung a semi circle of fine hams and below which were two large blocks of ice with pork, beef, mutton, etc. frozen within.

Then too the display of beautiful oil paintings, cut glass, etc. of Pacific Hardware Co. was much admired. Two little darky boys playing ping-pong in the Pearson & Potter booth also pleased many as well as the life-sized gray horse of wood with harness and rubber-tired buggy. Everything was attractive and Honolulu business men should be congratulated.

The ball game at Punahou was a "heart-breaking" for Maui people, the Maui beaten 9 to 0, all because of the great brawny giant of a pitcher, Barney Joy! They played good ball excepting a few errors made by over-anxiety to excel. Garcia made a star one-handed catch at center-field, Cornwell at left, caught everything that came his way, and made one of the few base hits off of Joy. Cummings did fine work as catcher till he split his hand in the 8th inning, in fact the field play of the boys was much praised, but alas they couldn't but Joy whose arm seemed like a great band of steel which never wearied of throwing balls with lightning-like speed into the fat hands of "Sonny Cunha," the fine catcher of the "Honolulu."

The young boy, like Maunites showed pluck to be proud of, but it was of no avail; it was like a first class high school nine playing against a semi-professional crack college club.

At the agricultural fair, Maui eclipsed all the islands excepting Oahu, eleven first prizes and four second were awarded to the farmers of our little island.

They were as follows:
E. H. Bailey, Makawao; first prize for watermelons and field corn. Second prize for pumpkins.

J. B. Wilson of Makawao took 1st prize for Irish Potatoes.
Mrs. Doherty Sylva of Lahaina took both 1st and 2nd for alligator pears. Wm. Apela of Waihee took 1st prize for pohos. S. E. Kaleikau of Waihee took 1st prize for mountain apples (obias). Miss Lucy Kaleikau of Waihee, 1st prize for best hand bananas. Lahaina Seminary took 1st prizes for tomatoes, coconuts and best exhibit of fruit; second prize for best exhibit of vegetables. James Lindsay of Haiku took 1st and 2nd prizes for carrots.

R. H. Bailey's 80 lb. pumpkin was the talk of the city and Mrs. Sylva's alligator pears were wonderful. They were of the purple variety but as large as melons (the truth) of the cantaloupe variety, and had very small seeds.

D. D. Baldwin of Haiku and Gov. Dole both had fine exhibits of the avocado pear.

If the season had been right, Makawao could have easily obtained prizes for peaches and figs.

Many people preferred the agricultural fair to the mechanical exhibition. Next time, cattle, horses, sheep, pigs, poultry, etc., should be listed on the program of exhibits. However it was a successful attempt for the first exposition ever held in Hawaii.

O Maui No Ka Oi.

The News has, since its inception, encouraged small farming and fruit culture on Maui, from a full and realizing sense of the wonderful and glorious possibilities along those lines lying dormant on our island.

As a vindication of the truth of this the News points with triumphant pride to the fact that in an inter-island exhibition Maui has taken eleven out of thirty first prizes, or over one-third of the first prizes awarded. This is an advertisement to Maui which is beyond any reasonably estimated money value, if it has the desired effect of stimulating small farming and fruit culture on Maui.

The list of prizes appears in the letter of our special correspondent, and the list would have been longer if other available exhibits, notable prize winning oranges from Wailuku, had been entered.

In order to encourage interest in the Honolulu exhibits, the News offered a cash premium of five dollars to each Maui winner of a first prize, and at least nine of these prizes have been captured; if not eleven, according to the conditions offered in the News and will be promptly paid in accordance with the terms suggested in the editorial of the News, issued on Saturday, July 12, as soon as official returns can be secured, which should not be later than next Wednesday.
